This course is the core introductory course in the Texts and Technologies Ph.D. program. Its purpose is to familiarize students with some core concepts that will recur throughout the T&T program, and which form the theoretical basis and backbone of the program. At the same time, we will be looking at some aspects of digital humanities tied to the concepts. The goal will be to both give students a lexicon and familiarity with concepts, and also to discuss some issues of the production of digital knowledge and experience.

Required Texts:

- Nicholas Gane & David Beer. New Media: The Key Concepts Bloomsbury, 2008. (GB)
- Noah Wardrip-Fruin & Nick Montfort eds. The New Media Reader. MIT Press, 2003. (WM)
- Julie Thompson Klein, Interdisciplining Digital Humanities: Boundary Work in an Emerging Field. Ann Arbor, MI: University of Michigan Press, 2014.

Requirements

1. Mandatory Financial Aid quiz: There is a quiz in Webcourses that all students must do, by order of the university. It is to ascertain who actually begins a course. The university needs to generate this data to report to the federal government. There is no reason for us to have a quiz at this point except to meet this requirement, but I would ask all of you to complete this, by the latest, by Wednesday Aug. 27, even if you are not on financial aid. The "grade" will not figure in your final grade for the course.

2. Presentation on a concept or set of concepts for a given week (due in the week of the relevant topic, 25% of final grade). This course is set up around a series of concepts that will recur throughout your program. Presentations are your chance to investigate those concepts. There are readings for each week - these are meant as background. Everyone needs to do them, but the presentation is not just a discussion of the readings, but of the concepts. So, you can go outside of the assigned readings (in fact, you are encouraged to). You can use readings from other weeks.

There are more people in this course than there are weeks for presentation. That means that there will be a couple of weeks when we will have two presenters. In those weeks, we will have two topics, and each presenter will take a different one. We will begin sign-ups on the first night, since in the second week there will already be a presentation.

There is a short set of guidelines for presentations on my courses page (bbjanz.com/courses). Scroll to the bottom of the page for these and more helpful guidelines on other topics.

3. Prospectus for final paper or digital artifact (due Tuesday, Oct. 14, 15% of final grade). It will be possible to either do a traditional research paper for the course, or a digital project. In either case, you will need to demonstrate both an understanding of the area, literature and/or previous digital products, and also make a case for some way of thinking about or looking at something. You can choose to develop a concept we have looked at in the course or investigate a new concept relevant to T&T. You could "wireframe" a digital humanities project –the prospectus would give the initial pitch for the project and the final digital artifact would be the full mockup, proof of concept, or in-depth overview of the process for knowledge production.
4. Background reading report (or literature review, or annotated bibliography, 10% of final grade) for final paper or digital artifact. Examples will be given in class for this, and there is discussion of this on my courses page (bbjanz.com/courses).
5. Final paper or digital artifact (due Tuesday, Dec. 2, 50% of final grade) This follows on your prospectus and background reading report/annotated bibliography.

One thing to note about the requirements: For a Ph.D. seminar, I don't think it's appropriate to have grades for things like attendance, punctuality or participation. At this level, this should be a given. If I think there's a problem, though, with someone's attendance, I will reserve the right to lower the overall course grade, as a last resort. I will not do that without previously speaking with the person and trying what I can to encourage constructive engagement with the course.

Grade Distribution: I will record the assignment grades based on the percentage of the course grade during the term. The letter grade will be calculated only at the end of the course, based on full course grade. The distribution will be as follows:

A: 93-100

B: 83-86

C: 73-76

D: 63-66

A-: 90-92

B-: 80-82

C-: 70-72

D-: 60-62

B+: 87-89

C+: 77-79

D+: 67-69

F: 0-59

Schedule: Introduction to Texts and Technologies
